Swintt releases first pachislot game, Hana Bana

Swintt, the Malta-based game developer, have released their first 'pachislot' game, Hana Bana.

With a focus on delivering localised content and products that align with certain player tastes, Hana Bana is inspired by the famous pachislot machines found in Japanese arcades.

Featuring the traditional 3-reel setup, a Hawaiian theme and giant flashing hibiscus flowers, Hana Bana echoes the traditional style of the original pachislot machines for a truly authentic experience.

The game was created on conjunction with local game artists, designers, and mathematicians to produce a realistic version of the digital environment and marks the first in a long series of pachislot-style games for Swintt.

David Mann, Business Development Director at Swintt commented on the release: "Hana Bana has been an exciting project for us as we continue to diversify our product offering. Many of our partners are looking for content that fits regional preferences and fits well with their brand ambitions, and Swintt want to remain at the forefront of offering relevant content."
